Matt Phillips is a painter living in Brooklyn, NY. His works often employ fundamental elements of painting: simple shapes, modulated values and color relationships. These rather rudimentary components are combined and remixed to produce unexpected outcomes. Color, shape, mark and form engage one another in both strange and familiar ways, becoming tense, humorous, quirky and ultimately meaningful. Phillips has had solo exhibitions at the Landing Gallery, Los Angeles, CA; Mindy Solomon Gallery, Miami, FL; Reynolds Gallery, Richmond, VA; Direktorenhaus Museum, Berlin, Germany; Studio d’Arte Raffaelli, Trento, Italy; Devening Projects, Chicago, IL; Zillman Art Museum, Bangor Maine; and Steven Harvey, New York, NY. She has received grants from the Joan Mitchell Foundation, New York Foundation for the Arts, Hunter College, the School of the Art Institute of Chicago, and the 2011 College Art Association MFA Professional-Development Fellowship. Her work is included in the collections of the Mead Art Museum at Amherst College, Davis Museum at Wellesley College, Time Equities in New York, JoAnn Hickey in New York, A.G. Rosen in New York, and Adam Driver and Joanne Tucker in New York. Valdez creates abstract works on canvas that incorporate embroidery, quilting, oil stick on mounted paper, and hand-dyed and commercially sourced fabrics. Her engineered surfaces have a vivid sense of tactility — they incorporate fabric embedded into the canvas structure, raised paint on paper, and silky embroidery floss. The interplay between varying materials and processes, between hard-edged and soft forms, and between art histories contributes to the luminous energy contained in these abstract works. There are two major traditions being referenced: the painting tradition, which has historically been male-dominated, and the fiber art tradition, which has been primarily female. A tension between these two traditions is felt in Valdez’s highly personal yet historically-rooted practice.
